

I urge you not to relax the restrictions on ownership of broadcast stations and newspapers, and on multiple ownership of radio broadcast stations in local markets. The current crisis in U.S. media is the result of too much consolidation, not too little. For only a few companies to own the majority of media outlets through which Americans get their information is profoundly anti-democratic.

The public interest is not served by giving a few monied interests near-total control over the public discourse.